On April 16, 2022, the Shenzhou 13 astronauts (宇航员) returned to the earth. They lived in the space station for 183 days, setting a new record for Chinese astronauts in a single flight.

When it comes to long-distance space travel, the biggest problem is that spaceships can only get as far as its fuel allows. In 1964, a British writer Clarke came up with the idea of “solar sailing” in his book. He wrote of large, mirror-like panels that collect power from the sun and free spaceships from the limitation of fuel. This idea was first successfully worked out in 2010 by Japan's satellite. Ever since then, the technology has been improved gradually.

Sunlight is limitless power, and wherever it exists, it will always push the ship forward. One day after the solar-powered spaceship sets out, it will probably increase its speed to 160 kilometers (千米) per hour. If it can fly continuously for three years, it will reach 160, 000 kilometers per hour, a speed faster than any other human spaceships. Scientists now believe the solar-powered spaceship can be used to explore deep space in the future, and bring a new revolution (革命) to human space travel.

- A. 30 days            B. 183 days            C. 200 days

38. What does the underlined word This in paragraph 2 refer to?

- A. Long-distance space flights    B. Large solar panels    C. Space exploration

39. What speed could the solar-powered spaceship reach if it keeps flying for three years?

- A. 160 kilometers per hour
 B. 16,000 kilometers per hour
 C. 160,000 kilometers per hour

40. Which of the following is NOT true according to the passage?

- A. Solar-powered spaceships use sunlight as power.
 B. Solar-powered spaceships can travel faster than any other human spaceships.
